PICTORIAL STORY OF BATTLING NELSON'S DEFEAT OF BRITT.

After the finishing right hander Britt fell forward upon his face. knocked cleanly out.

NELSON'S IRON ENDURANCE CARRIED HIM THROUGH, SAYS ROBERT EDGREN

Britt guessing . EDGREN'S COLUMN

On the Pacific Coast Jimmy Britt was knowledged as the title holder. Out In the East Nelson will have many Joe Gans, has a legitimate claim that

The amateur world is as deeply intersisted as the professional. A five-mile stand as the professional a five-mile against Nelson's jaw. The Dane," pressed in Britt's right hand brought up against Nelson's jaw. The Dane, without given an inch, swung back. There was nothing about that left-handed blow, as it started, to bring the appearance of the flather indeers or their feet. It looked just like a thousand others that Nelson had sent whisting across during the fight. It landed on Britt's time had come. Ne'son, unjarred, now more than ever the ""speakable Dane." pressed in Britt's right hand brought up against Nelson's jaw. The Dane, without giving an inch, swung back. There was nothing about that left-handed blow, as it started, to bring the spectators to their feet. It looked just like a thousand others that Nelson had sent whisting across during the fight. It landed on Britt's tired jaw, just as a hundred others perhaps had landed during the preceding seventy minutes.

Britt spent the remaining minute of the count to start over him.

Britt spent the remaining minute of the round beating the Battler about the ring, cutting and bruising and slashing him until the blood ran and Nelson stargered as he lurched back.

Nelson had to hug Britt in the clinches in the fourth round, which is a thing he never did before in a fight. That slone shows how furfusity the first slone shows how furfusity the first slone, Nelson let go at the order of the freeze, but instead of standing on the defence, only lowered his head swing after swing.
